

In an effort to counter climate change, Barbados has forged a strong partnership with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). During the last several years, UNEP has helped ...

These measures help to protect marine life, keep beaches clean, and promote a culture of environmental responsibility among residents and visitors alike. Beyond tackling plastic waste, ...

Barbados is a small-island nation in the Caribbean that is vulnerable to climate change and rising sea levels, while also having an economy that is dependent on tourism, therefore protecting the ...

An integrated planning and resource management framework would allow the Ministry of Environment and National Beautification to mainstream all aspects of environmental concerns into the Barbados ...

The Barbados Environmental Conservation Trust (BECT) has been set up to enable and support local environmental activities aimed at the preservation and restoration of Barbados' natural ...

The country's efforts towards achieving long-term sustainable development hinge on the implementation of national policies, programmes and indigenous solutions which work across three ...

The projects which the BESF is seeking to provide grant funding for will have a direct positive impact on the lives of Barbadians who call the island "home" and visitors to the island by ...

From community-led conservation efforts to innovative agricultural practices and a growing eco-tourism sector, Barbados is showing the world that sustainability can be both culturally relevant and ...

The climate change risk profile of Barbados is dominated by coastal and weather effects, especially sea level rise, storm surge, increased tropical storm and hurricane intensity and frequency; and other ...

This report examines progress with environmental sustainability in Barbados after 50 years as an independent country. This is a big topic, with implications for virtually every aspect of life in Barbados.

Web: <https://idsolar.co.za>