

What is a shipping container home in France?

A shipping container home in France can be a great way to build your dream home on a budget. Shipping containers are used to move goods worldwide on ships, trains, and trucks. Once they are put out of commission, they are either destroyed or stored.

How much does a shipping container home cost?

Shipping container homes start at around 15,000 euros for a basic, one-container home. However, this can go up to 150,000 euros and even more if you use multiple containers. Either way, a home like this is much more suitable for someone on a budget. If you are looking for a builder that creates amazing custom homes, Karmod could be a great choice.

Can freight containers be recycled into homes?

Once they are worn out, these resistant structures can be easily recycled into homes. In addition to their structural stability and easy transport, the benefits of reusing freight containers for a housing purpose are the quick and more economic construction, and a smaller carbon footprint with the waste reduction.

What is a shipping container used for?

Shipping containers are used to move goods worldwide on ships, trains, and trucks. Once they are put out of commission, they are either destroyed or stored. However, you can use them as the main structure of a home to save money on construction and build something amazing.
