

By aggressively developing renewable energy and optimizing the use of natural gas, Indonesia can maintain energy security while progressing toward sustainable energy independence.

Prabowo's ambitious goal for Indonesia of achieving energy self-sufficiency faces significant challenges due to the country's heavy reliance on fossil fuels and renewed large-scale biofuel ambitions.

President Prabowo also targeted energy independence in the next five years, including the cessation of fuel imports. President Prabowo is optimistic that Indonesia will not only become an ...

President Prabowo Subianto Thursday (10/31) at the Merdeka Palace, Jakarta, outlined strategic actions for enhancing national energy independence and implementing targeted energy subsidies.

The Indonesian government has a big plan for Papua: to make it one of the pillars of the country's energy independence. The plan isn't just to build power plants or make more fuel.

The inauguration of DEN marks a strategic moment to consolidate national energy policies, safeguard supply continuity, and position Indonesia as a regional leader in energy independence in ...

Indonesia's challenging energy transition process demands national commitment and strong leadership to ensure it is fair for the people, supports human development, achieves energy self-sufficiency, ...

The event, organized by Energy Academy Indonesia (ECADIN) and the Directorate for Science and Technology Area (DKST) ITB, brought together policymakers, industry leaders, and academics to ...

President Prabowo Subianto has announced that Indonesia will ban the export of palm oil waste, including used cooking oil, to ensure the resource is utilized ...

Indonesia's push for energy independence faces key challenges as experts warn the nation stands between fossil fuel reliance and renewables.

Web: <https://idsolar.co.za>